The 1.5 million development of the Wandsworth Town library building was a complex project re-scoping the old Museum building into a modern spacious, relaxing environment for library visitors.

Located opposite Southside Shopping Centre on Garratt Lane, the library is a key part of the £1bn regeneration of Wandsworth town centre.

The project shows Demco's flexible and adaptable approach in adapting some of the old shelving from other libraries and blending with a newer generation of Bomefa 100 shelving. The introduction of glass end panels has unified the space creating a very on trend library interior.

Meryl Jones, Assistant Head of Library and Heritage Service said: "On this project, which was really difficult, I had so much help and so much encouragement, so many visits that I really couldn't have done it without Demco's support".

The library was officially opened by Mayor of London Boris Johnson.
